1. The Communist forces in North Korea have established a gasoline dump at Chinlinhsu (6855/2651/1047) (? Kiminto), about 2 kilometers north of P'yonggang (127-18, 38-25) (GT-5253), to service motor transport on the highways.
2. This dump is as follows: A reservoir with a surface of about 400 square meters is about 500 meters directly east of Chinlinhsu. There are hills south of the reservoir, and the area is heavily-wooded with a natural pine forest. The highway from P'yonggang to Ich'on (126-53, 38-30) (GT-1563) through Chinlinhsu passes through the forest south of the reservoir. The gasoline dump is in this pine woods, and the hilly area is used for the dispersal of trucks as a precaution against air-raids; fifty to sixty vehicles can be concealed here.
3. This dump consists of nine buildings at the foot of the hills south of the reservoir. Three of them are constructed of sheet iron and contain principally gasoline stored in drums. The other six buildings are built of concrete and camouflaged with thatch and pine boughs. Three of these buildings are used as quarters for the staff of this dump and for the garrison which guards it; the use of the other three buildings is not known.
4. A small repair shop has also been established here to service motor vehicles using this dump as a gasoline supply point.
